The White House Expenses.

"Paking one consideration with another," the lot of the President of the Uniten States is not entirely an unhappy one, so far as his domestic arrangements are concerned. He has no occasion to bother himself much about market bills, or tent, or servants, or gas or plumbers' bills. With ordinary prudence he can manage to pull through on the allowences made by Congress, without involving himself in debt, as Jefferson and some of the earlier Presidents are said to have done during their occupancy of the Executive Mansien. A gance through the pending sundry civil bill, supplemented by the regular legislative and executive appropriation bill, discloses that Mr. Harrison is likely to be able to make both ends meet at the close of the coming fiscal year. As a starter, he has his salary of $50,000. There is a further sum of $25,000 allowed him, to spend as he sees fit, in recorpsting his rooms and making his domestic apartments comfortable in the matter of furniture. Sixteen thousand dollers or the cabouts is set aside to thousand dollers or theresponds is set astact to pay for his gas and electric lights. Three thousand dollers is allowed him for coals. To keep his greenhouses in order so as to furnish him with hottophole bouquets and flowers to present to his friends, $7,000 is appropriated. A thousand dollars is allowed him for his front carden and $5,000 for his him for his front garden and $5,000 for his back garden. If his kitchen pipes should happen to burst in the winter there is a $2,500 plumber's bill for him to draw upon. He has no servants to provide except a cook and scullions and chambermaids. Congress furnishes him with a steward and overything else in the servant line, at a cost of about $15,000. He has not even to provide matches. The appropriation for fuel and lights distinctly specifies that it shall include matches. He has to buy his butcher's meat and groceries and his wine, however, when he gives a dinner party. Pretty well all else is given him. And lest there should be something overlooked, a contingent fund of $8,000, which he is at liberty to spend as he thinks proper, rendering no account to any-body, is added as a cap sheaf. The total appropriations for the domestic economy of the Executive Mansion, excluding the salaries of the private secretaries and clerks engaged solely on official business, foot up
